

Culinary Competition for Teens in US and Canada

Written by Eater

Wednesday, 21 December 2011 00:55

The world today is becoming competitive and therefore most students today have to decide what they would like to do in the near future because they would have to plan their studies accordingly. While most people prefer to choose the same jobs that millions have already chosen earlier, but there are many students who think outside the box and make sure that they make the most out of their hobbies and talents that they have. If you are looking for a creative job and if you feel you have the culinary talent in you then you should look out for the New Best Teen Chef competition with Art Institutes

Competition is normally the best launch pad for students because they can compete with the best partners that share the same passion. At The International Culinary School students have the opportunity to showcase their talent and many aspiring chefs test their creative skills in the kitchen because they would like to make the most of the chance that they have been provided. This time The International Culinary School has provided an equal opportunity to all the high school seniors in the United States and Canada to showcase their culinary talent and skills.

Aspiring Chefs Test Their Creative Skills in the Kitchen

For the very first time, The Art Institutes will provide an opportunity to high school seniors to showcase their culinary skills. The winner of the competition will win tuition scholarships that are worth over $4000. The first winner in the high school senior category will win $1500 and the second winner will win $1000. According to Chef Michael Nenes, Assistant Vice President of Culinary Arts for The International Culinary Schools at The Art Institutes their competitions provide good and equal opportunity to all the students who are committed and have great culinary skills that can help them to make their career.